MARKET SUMMARY

INDIA

- The Indian recycling market remained tight during the week. Prices, which had declined last week, have recovered to some extent, although the weaker exchange rate has partly offset the improvement.
- Vessel availability continues to be the key constraint, with very limited tonnage currently being offered for recycling. As a result, buyers remain highly competitive for whatever suitable units become available.
- The market continues to depend significantly on opportunities involving sanctioned vessels or specialised assets, including drilling and other non-conventional units, due to the continued shortage of mainstream recycling candidates.
- Overall, buying interest remains strong despite the tight supply environment, with recyclers actively competing for the limited tonnage available.

BANGLADESH

- The Bangladeshi recycling market remained relatively quiet during the week, with very few vessels available for recycling and limited market activity.
- Buyers continue to show interest in acquiring tonnage, although buying appetite remains comparatively more measured than in India and Pakistan.
- Market sentiment has softened somewhat, with recyclers maintaining a more moderate approach while continuing to look for suitable opportunities.
- Overall, Bangladesh remains moderately positioned, with vessel availability continuing to be the principal constraint on market activity.

PAKISTAN

- The Pakistani recycling market remained active in terms of buying interest, although vessel availability continues to be extremely limited, similar to the situation in India.
- Very few actual sales have been reported. One approximately 17,000-tonne tanker, which had previously been hit by a drone, has reached Gadani, while otherwise there has been little meaningful tonnage entering the market.
- The market now appears increasingly saturated, with buyers having already acquired tonnage and some feeling that earlier purchases were concluded at comparatively high levels. As a result, vessel prices have moved lower.

- Local steel market conditions have also remained subdued, with pressure from imported HR coil from China and, more recently, competitively priced material from Brazil restricting improvement in domestic market sentiment.
- Overall, buying capacity remains present, but the combination of limited vessel availability, softer vessel prices and a weak local steel environment has made buyers more cautious.

TURKIYE

- The Turkish recycling market showed a slight improvement during the week, with vessel prices edging higher in line with the modest seasonal firming typically observed at this time of year.
- Imported scrap and local steel prices also recorded some gains, providing additional support to market sentiment, although the upward movement in recycling vessel prices remained limited.
- Overall, market conditions remain relatively stable, with recyclers maintaining broadly similar buying levels while allowing for a small seasonal improvement in pricing and continuing to await clearer direction from the underlying steel and scrap markets.
