MARKET SUMMARY

INDIA

- The Indian recycling market remains firm, with overall buying sentiment continuing to be positive.
- Local steel prices have shown some improvement during the week, providing support to the market. However, the benefit of stronger steel levels has been partly offset by movements in the US dollar.
- Buying interest remains healthy, while the availability of recycling candidates continues to be limited as strong freight markets encourage owners to keep vessels trading.
- Overall, India remains a well-supported market, with firm sentiment despite limited availability of tonnage.

BANGLADESH

- The Bangladesh recycling market has slowed somewhat during the week, with local market levels coming off and buyers showing a more cautious approach.
- Softer scrap prices, including lower HMS 1 & 2 levels, have also weighed on immediate buying sentiment and restricted any significant improvement in the market.
- Despite the current softness, market participants remain hopeful that conditions will improve in the coming days as demand for scrap strengthens.
- Overall, the market remains relatively subdued for the time being, with buyers monitoring local steel and scrap developments before becoming more active.

PAKISTAN

- The Pakistan recycling market continues to see interest from several buyers actively looking for tonnage, although pricing remains broadly similar to last week with limited upward movement.
- Market indications remain wide, with offers ranging considerably between buyers, making price discovery somewhat difficult at present.
- Imported HR coil from China continues to provide competition to the local market, adding another consideration for recyclers when assessing buying levels.
- Sales activity has slowed, while the availability of suitable recycling candidates also remains limited as strong freight markets continue to keep vessels in commercial trading.

TURKIYE

- The Turkish recycling market has shown some improvement this week, with local recycling prices edging slightly higher amid modestly improved market sentiment.
- Easing inflation and signs of improvement in the domestic economic environment have provided some support to local recycling activity.
- At the same time, a greater number of recycling candidates have been circulating in the market, which could place some pressure on buying levels if tonnage availability continues to increase.
- Turkish yards continue to operate close to full capacity, providing stability to the market. Overall, the market is slightly firmer this week, although no significant movement in pricing is expected in the near term.
